It is important to note that a pardon is not a right, but an exceptional privilege, which only the Governor has the power to grant.

For criminal convictions in the state courts of Hawaii, the pardon process starts with the completion of the pardon application form. Once the application is submitted as instructed, it is reviewed and investigated by the Hawaii Paroling Authority, the Department of Public Safety and the Department of the Attorney General. Reviews and investigations often include interviews with not only the applicant, but with references listed by applicants and others whom are identified through investigation. Therefore, it can be a lengthy process.

After submitting your application, if you have changes to your residence or mailing address, contact telephone number(s), employment, and/or marital status, please immediately notify this agency in writing at the address provided above so that we can update your application.

The Governor can only grant pardons for criminal convictions, which have occurred in the state courts of Hawaii. Any criminal convictions, which occurred in other states or in federal court, would have to be addressed through the processes of those jurisdictions.

You should note that a pardon is different from an expungement, where a crime is deleted from one's criminal record. The Governor does not have the power to expunge a record. Further, in the State of Hawaii, expungements are only provided for in certain situations. Information regarding expungement matters should be addressed with the State of Hawaii's Department of the Attorney General. A pardon does not involve, nor is it a step toward an expungement. Further, while a pardon may be helpful to one's employability, employers can differ on whether a pardon alone will suit their requirements. We hope that the foregoing provides some guidance on what this process entails and how to begin the process of applying for a pardon.
